Point of view

In 2023 saw the curators of the Deutschlandmuseum present a completely new type of museum to Berlin: crossing a museum with a theme park, they have succeeded in making the history of Germany accessible to all!

Pressebilder AUSWAHL

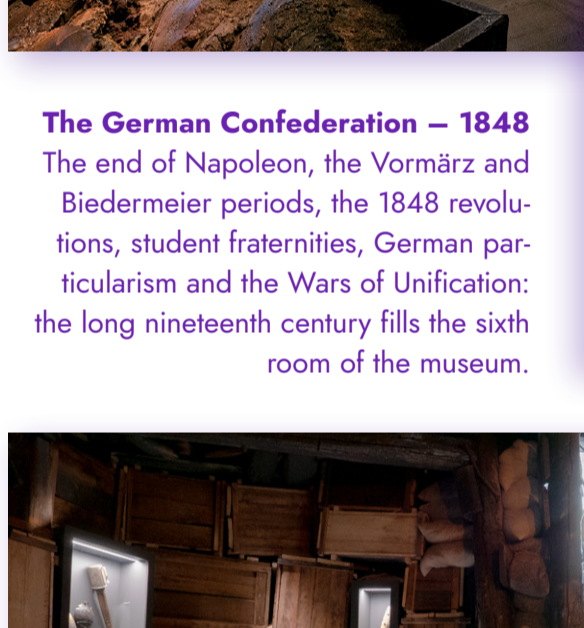

The Germanic Peoples – 9 A.D.
The first immersive museum space is a recreation of the Battle of the Teutoburg Forest. Interactive stations enable visitors to explore the world of the Romans and the Germanic peoples.

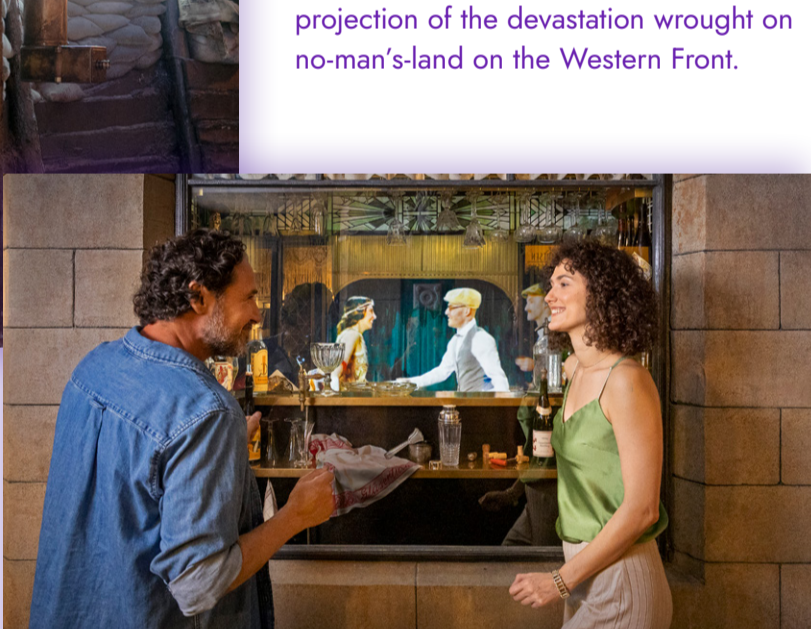

The High Middle Ages – 1212
The third room is realized as a medieval castle. The view out of the castle window shows both the sunny and dark sides of the age. Interactive installations let visitors slip into a number of roles, including that of a minstrel.

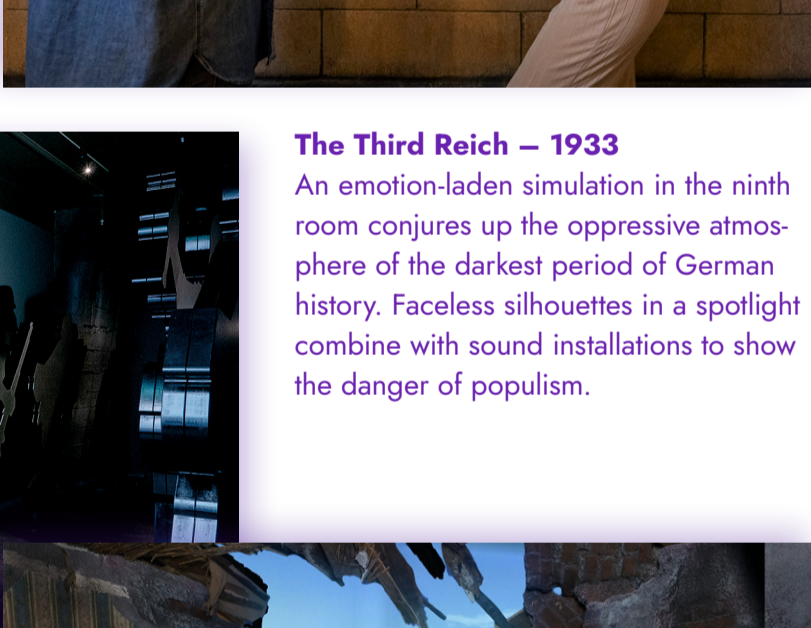

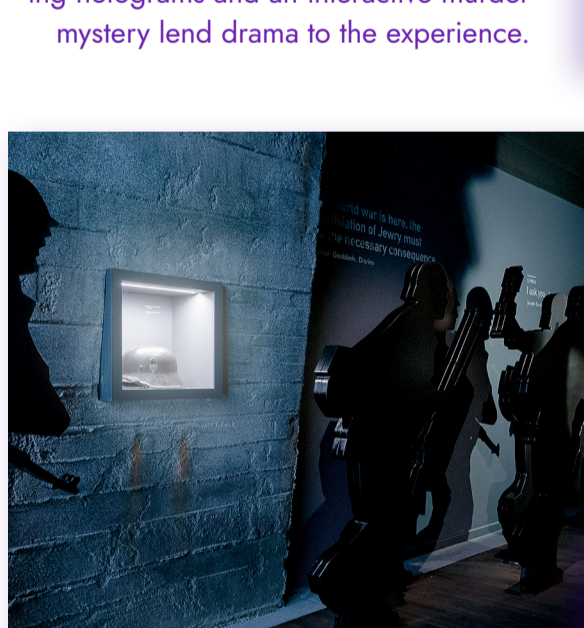

The Reformation – 1517
A 16th century printing workshop tells the story of the Reformation. Highlight: an interactive Gutenberg printing press. The visitor learns about the horrors of the 30 Years' War in a lead glass workshop.

The Enlightenment – 1740
The light of the Enlightenment fills the fifth room, which presents the leading minds of the »Age of Reason«. Climb on Kant's head and see the world from his perspective.

The German Confederation – 1848
The end of Napoleon, the Vormärz and Biedermeier periods, the 1848 revolutions, student fraternities, German particularism and the Wars of Unification: the long nineteenth century fills the sixth room of the museum.

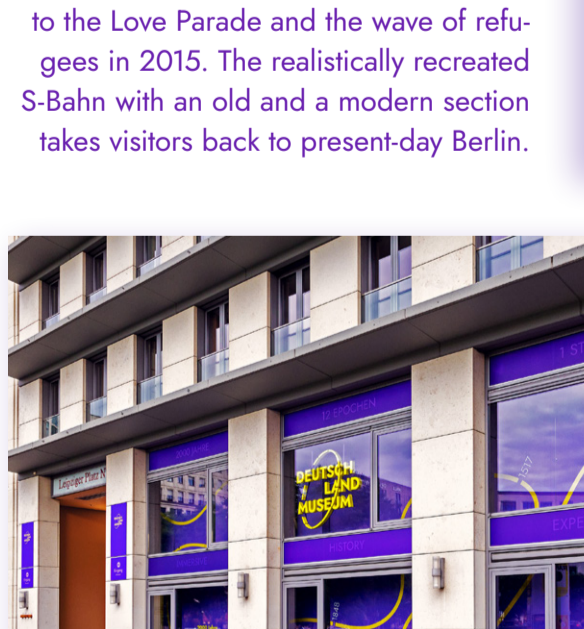

Imperial Germany – 1914
The recreation of a trench from the Western Front recalls the horrors of the First World War. Look through a trench periscope to see a realistic large-format projection of the devastation on no-man's-land on the Western Front.

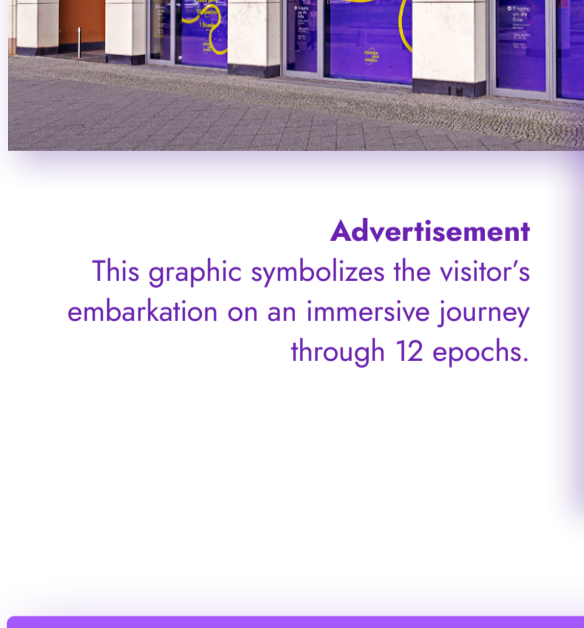

The Third Reich – 1933
An emotion-laden simulation in the ninth room conjures up the oppressive atmosphere of the darkest period of German history. Faceless silhouettes in a spotlight combine with sound installations to show the danger of populism.

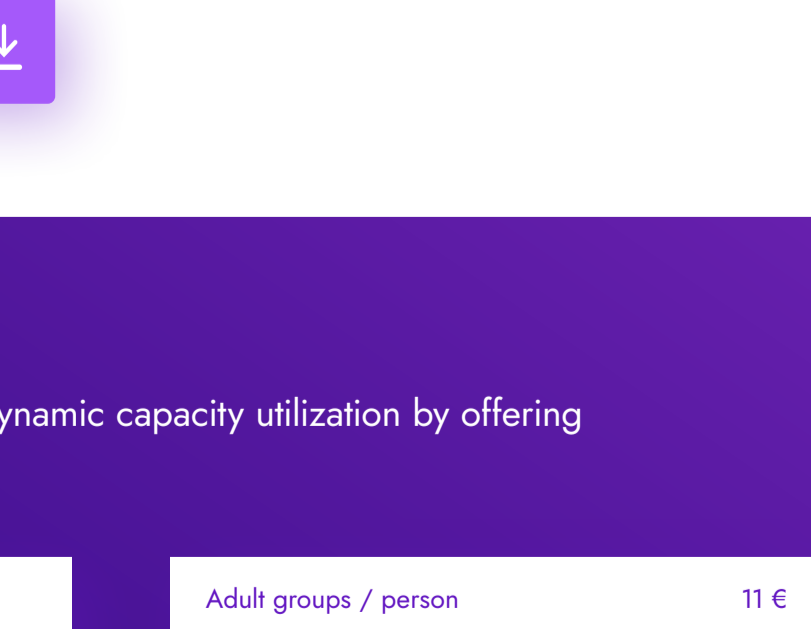

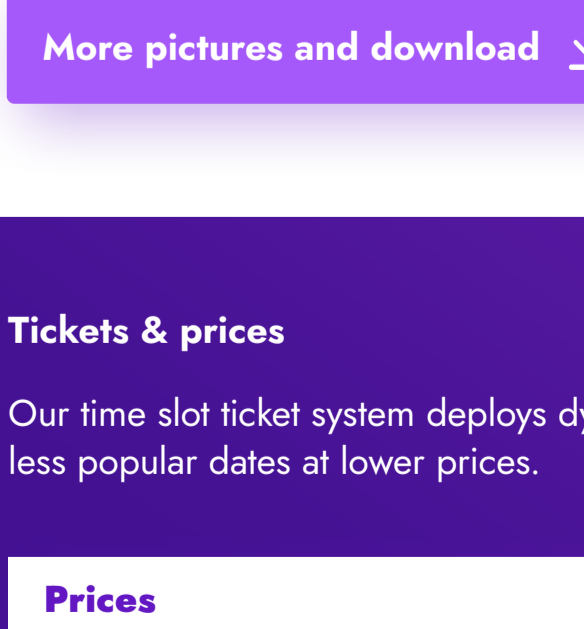

The Division of Germany – 1945
A bombed-out flat provides a view of what came to be known as the »Raisin bombers« taking part in the Berlin Airlift. A flat from the prosperous West German 1950s with a living room, kitchen and an animated panorama of the city lights.

The two Germanies – 1972
The interactive showcases and the alternating projections of department stores from West and East Germany in the eleventh room bring to life the two states separated by the Iron Curtain. The television tower made from old tube televisions enables visitors to experience the media landscape in East and West.

German Reunification – 1990
In the fifteenth and final room, visitors move through an S-Bahn viewing video clips of the euphoria of the fall of the Berlin Wall to the Love Parade and the wave of Refugees in 2015. The realistically recreated S-Bahn with an old and a modern section takes visitors back to present-day Berlin.

Deutschlandmuseum
Located directly on Leipziger Platz, in the middle of the former death strip, just a few metres from the German Spy Museum.
